

Amateur Radio VHF/UHF Operations

Perhaps no other radio service tends to be as variable in nature as Amateur Radio VHF/UHF operations. Most repeaters operate on “shoestring” budgets only by the graces of their individual volunteer owners or through the combined efforts of club members. With tower space selling for premium prices sites often change. Remote receiver sites and even transmitters suffer frequent weather damage and must await funding for repair. Many systems can be remotely controlled or reconfigured by their control operators. Many systems now offer internet voice linking, enabling world wide use. In terms of quality, some of these systems rival many public safety repeater networks for coverage.

Our listing is geared primarily towards monitoring only use. No indication is made of which systems are open to the public for general use and we encourage you to research this prior to using any repeater listed below. Only licensed radio amateurs may transmit on amateur radio frequencies. CTCSS tones listed are those known to be generally associated with the system for either talk-in or talk-out. They frequently change and may be turned on or off by system operators. More information is available at: <http://www.arrl.org/>
